Red Cross for peace time training against a period of national emergency was sounded yesterday at a meeting of Red Cross workers, at the home of Mrs. Whitelaw Reid.

"Back to the war spirit," was the slogan of the meeting, by which the Red Cross officials meant the zeal and the devotion which animated the women of the country during the war.

Women are to be asked to enlist for a service of three hours a week for six weeks. Their work will be classified under eight heads just as it was during the war—administrative, elerical, production, canteen, motor, health, home service and recreation.

Miss Mabel Boardman sounded the call for peace time duty, declaring that the country needed to keep an army of trained women ready to respond to any emergency, such as a great flood, a great fire or epidemic like that when influenza swept the country.

"The regular wolfare workers and

"The regular welfare workers and charitable organizations are sufficient to provide for ordinary peace-time needs," she said, 'but when an emergency arises they are not adequate, nor can they leave their everyday occupations in order to answer a sudden need. We must have trained women workers in addition to the peace-time forces, just as we have the National

It is all very well to say that the women of the United States learned during the war how to run canteens and make surgical dressings, but these women will not be available twenty years from now. We must keep our women's army up to the mark every year. The girls can cooperate with peace-time organizations during their period of training. There is no town which has not a hospital or a school which could not use the service of women. I suggest, for example, that the women who enlist for canteen service could be nut to work capping. 2J said he would inspect the Standard Oil service plants in China, Japan and played "Auld Lang Syne," on the invoided send accounts of his visits to the first of its kind to be attempted by a passenger liner. HOOKSET, N. H., Nov. 21.-In Bert Raven, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, reported to be searching by radio for his parents from whom he was separated sixteen years ago, Xavier Champagne, of this town, believes he has recognized a son who disappeared from his home in Manchester in 1906. Champagne has written for proofs of identity.

Champagne compared the circumstances of his boy's disappearance with the version given by Raven of his experiences sixteen years ago. The Champagne boy, playing with other children on a road near Manchester, in 1906, left them to return home. He was never seen again by his parents, who believed that gypsies had stolen the child. Raven in his broadcast message said he had been kidnaped when a child.

Young Boswell Interviews Mlle. Sorel

BECAUSE she is a leading actress of the Comedie Francaise, she is giving America a season of French plays, she has the most beautiful apartment in Paris, she is a remarkable personality, she has the most alluring emerald Young Boswell has ever seen. It is difficult to translate Mlle. Sorel, not because Young Boswell has to struggle with the dictionary, but because her remarks do not sound so well in English. Young Boswell sat in a corner while she rehearsed a scene from "Camille." She sat on the arm of a chair, in a clinging, black gown, boasting the mere echo of a train, and a hat built up of feathers like a Willy Pogany castle. A strand of pearls and the emerald, which Young Boswell cannot forget, even now, were her only adornments.

The rehearsal finished abruptly. Mlle. Sorel arose and crossed the room slowly. Young Boswell arose and stood very still. She came close and took both his hands.

Other visitors came, until the room was full, and MLLE. SOREL seemed to talk to each of them at one time, on separate subjects. Such grace, such separate subjects. Such grace, such brittle, clever phrases, such simplicity, for she seemed like a child at times, dazzled Young Bowwell. A secretary came in to tell Madamoiselle that ten reporters and seven photographers waited in the next room. MLLE. SOREL—I am so, so sorry.

Monday afternoon, after twenty-six years of service with the Police Department. With his passing the Police Department losses its champion lifesaver. In his period of police duty Mulhall earned the reputation of being the handlest man to trouble whenever trouble occurred on the entire roster.
He joined the department in 1886 and three years later set the first atone of his reputation when he crawled out of bed, clad in pajamas only, captured two burglars in the early hour of the morning. Next year he jumped into the harbor and rescued a passenger who had fallen from the Stated Island ferry, and in 1992 he suffered a frac-tured leg when he stopped a runaway horse, thus saving many pedestrians from injury.

horse, thus saving many pedestrians from injury.

In 1905 Mulhall was mentioned and praised in the official report of the "Slocum" disaster. In 1909 he rescued another drowning ferryboat passenger from the habor, and a year later was commended for a similar rescue off Coney Island. His greatest achievement was recorded in 1911, when fourteen Chinese coolies on board a British ship, mutinied and jumped into the harbor. Mulhall saved ten of them from drowning alone, for which he was given a Congressional medal and a special medal from the Chinese government. In 1912 he received a special been kinnaped when a child.
